STUFF ABOUT STARS

Primitive Jungle No Place For Modern Romance

If he had a choice, Gary Cooper would probably prefer to make love on skis, but as the star of an outdoor drama of the Everglades, the tall Cooper found himself hemmed in by swamp flowers and reptiles, when he said sweet words to Mari Aldon in "Distant Drums."

This forthcoming Milton Sperling production in Technicolor was filmed entirely on location in the Florida Everglades, and both Cooper and Miss Aldon agreed that as fine as the Everglades might be, there are better places for screen romance.

"There's nothing like chasing alligators to warm up for a romantic scene," Cooper said, and Miss Aldon added, "Unless it's battling away the mosquitoes and chiggers."

Cooper recalled that he has played love scenes on horseback, on battleships, in airplanes, in stables and on the traditional front porch swing, but never before when surrounded by such exotic decor as the wild Everglades provide.

As for Miss Aldon, she being a newcomer to the screen had no basis for comparison. "I only know," she said, scratching a mosquito welt, "there must be more romantic places to make love than in an alligator and insect infested jungle."

Something To See

Doris Day's blackface imitation of the late Al Jolson for Warner Bros.' "I'll See You In My Dreams." Doris sings "Toot Toot Tootsie," a Gus Kahn song popularized by Jolson.

Little Actor Has Big Voice

When the midget who was to stand-in for Georgie Winslow, the 5-year-old actor, walked on the set of "Room For One More" for the first time, Master Winslow was in front of the cameras playing a scene with his motion picture daddy, Cary Grant.

Now Georgie has an amazing voice, which sounds not unlike a fog horn in its deepness.

The midget hearing the voice, stomped up to the edge of the set and peered at the performers. Then he saw Georgie and relaxed.

"I thought for a moment it was another midget taking over my job," he said.

Newcomer To Make Hollywood Her Home

Patricia Hawks, daughter of Bessie Love, may move to Hollywood where her mother and her father, director William Hawks, attained cinema prominence. Since coming to the film capital several months ago from London, the 19-year-old dancer has been kept busy in three musical pictures, "About Face," "I'll See You In My Dreams" and "She's Working Her Way Through College."

Miss Hawks returns to England this month with her mother, but she'll be back in Hollywood next summer to concentrate on an American film career.

Hollywood Record

Warner Bros.' new musical, "I'll See You In My Dreams," is the 52nd picture directed by Michael Curtiz on which Limey Plews has been the property man. Plews was property man for Curtiz for the first time on "Bright Lights," in 1929.

Christmas Scene Real Happening To Danny Thomas

One of the most tender scenes in musical, "I'll See You In My Dreams," occurs when songwriter Gus Kahn, played by Danny Thomas, is forced to write parodies of his hit songs for a burlesque comedian in Chicago in order to get enough money to buy Christmas presents for his two children and wife, played by Doris Day.

It's a scene which Thomas plays with particular conviction since it was relatively few years ago that an unknown and unemployed comedian by the name of Amos Jacobs was in the same city, wondering how he could get enough money for presents on Christmas for his family. This same Jacobs changed his name to Danny Thomas, the first names of two of his brothers, and went on to score a smash hit at the 5100 Club in Chicago. From then on he has travelled the success road.

Christmas of 1951 will find Thomas at his beautiful Beverly Hills home, surrounded by his wife and three children, and grateful, for the many presents he is able to place under the Christmas tree. Danny will never forget that lean Dec. 25 in the Windy City.

Rising Star

Gene Nelson, who is doing some spectacular leaps for him gymnastic dance number in Technicolor musical, "She's Working Her Way Through College," comes by his agility naturally. At Santa Monica High School (Calif.), Gene's record for the high jump is still unbroken.

Note To Hostesses

If Gary Cooper's in town and you're trying to get him to a party, offer him raw oysters, steamed oysters, fried oysters, any kind of oysters. He loves them. The only party he went to while in Florida filming "Distant Drums," the Milton Sperling production in Technicolor for Warner Bros. release, was an oyster-fry shindig.

Fans Want Diet Along With Photo Of Actor

Raymond Burr is convinced American women think more of their shapes than they do of art.

Now acting a featured role in "Mara Maru," adventure drama starring Errol Flynn and Ruth Roman, Burr revealed that during one recent week he received 1343 letters from feminine fans.

Of the missives, 415 were typical fan praise, lauding his thespian skill, his faultless speech and closing with the customary request for an autographed photo.

The balance of the letters asked for copies of the diet by which he lost 120 pounds in four months, dropping from a blimpish 305 to a natty 185 pounds.

Burr doesn't say his feelings are hurt.

But he is answering all the diet requests with a printed form, terse, not curt, stating that since all individuals are different no one should diet without first consulting a reputable physician.

"And I am not a physician," says Burr, "I am an actor."

Play in Park

Warner Bros. will film several sequences for the upcoming "The Will Rogers Story" in Will Rogers State Park near Santa Monica, Calif. The park was formerly the residence of the famous cowboy-humorist. Will Rogers, Jr., will portray his father and Jane Wyman, Mrs. Rogers, in the Warner film which Michael Curtiz is to direct.
